Such a label should be stuck on the product which has the highest `products.products.scores.week.views` value.

Fonts, colors, sizes... all of this is up to you. The design we provided is just a direction, but we don't care about it much, as long as it looks good (what it's important for us is the code)

On desktop, should be possible to scroll only with the arrows. Dragging the carousel with the mouse should be deactivated.

Decimals should be shown, as long as they are not trailing zeros (.00). In that case, they should not show up.

This product is sitting here alone, not part of the carousel. The only possible action should be to click on it, and it will redirect to the URL of the product.

The product shown here should be the one with the highest `products.products.scores.week.buys` value.

However, this product should be excluded from the carousel.

It is not for a mistake that this product is cut, but rather to let the user understand that there is more to swipe.
